Creative task 2016

The last couple of years, people outside of Europe have been forced to leave their countries and their homes because of the war.

The immigration to Sweden has been huge, and a lot of people are reacting badly to it which has made the refugees to feel unwelcomed. In a lot of cities here in Sweden, refugees haven't been able to show people their social side. These people have experienced war, where some of them have lost their families.

To help these refugees become a part of our society, i am introducing a new app called Stockholm Involved. This app focuses on everyone that want to make a difference and to the young refugees that want to start practice a sport and meet new friends.

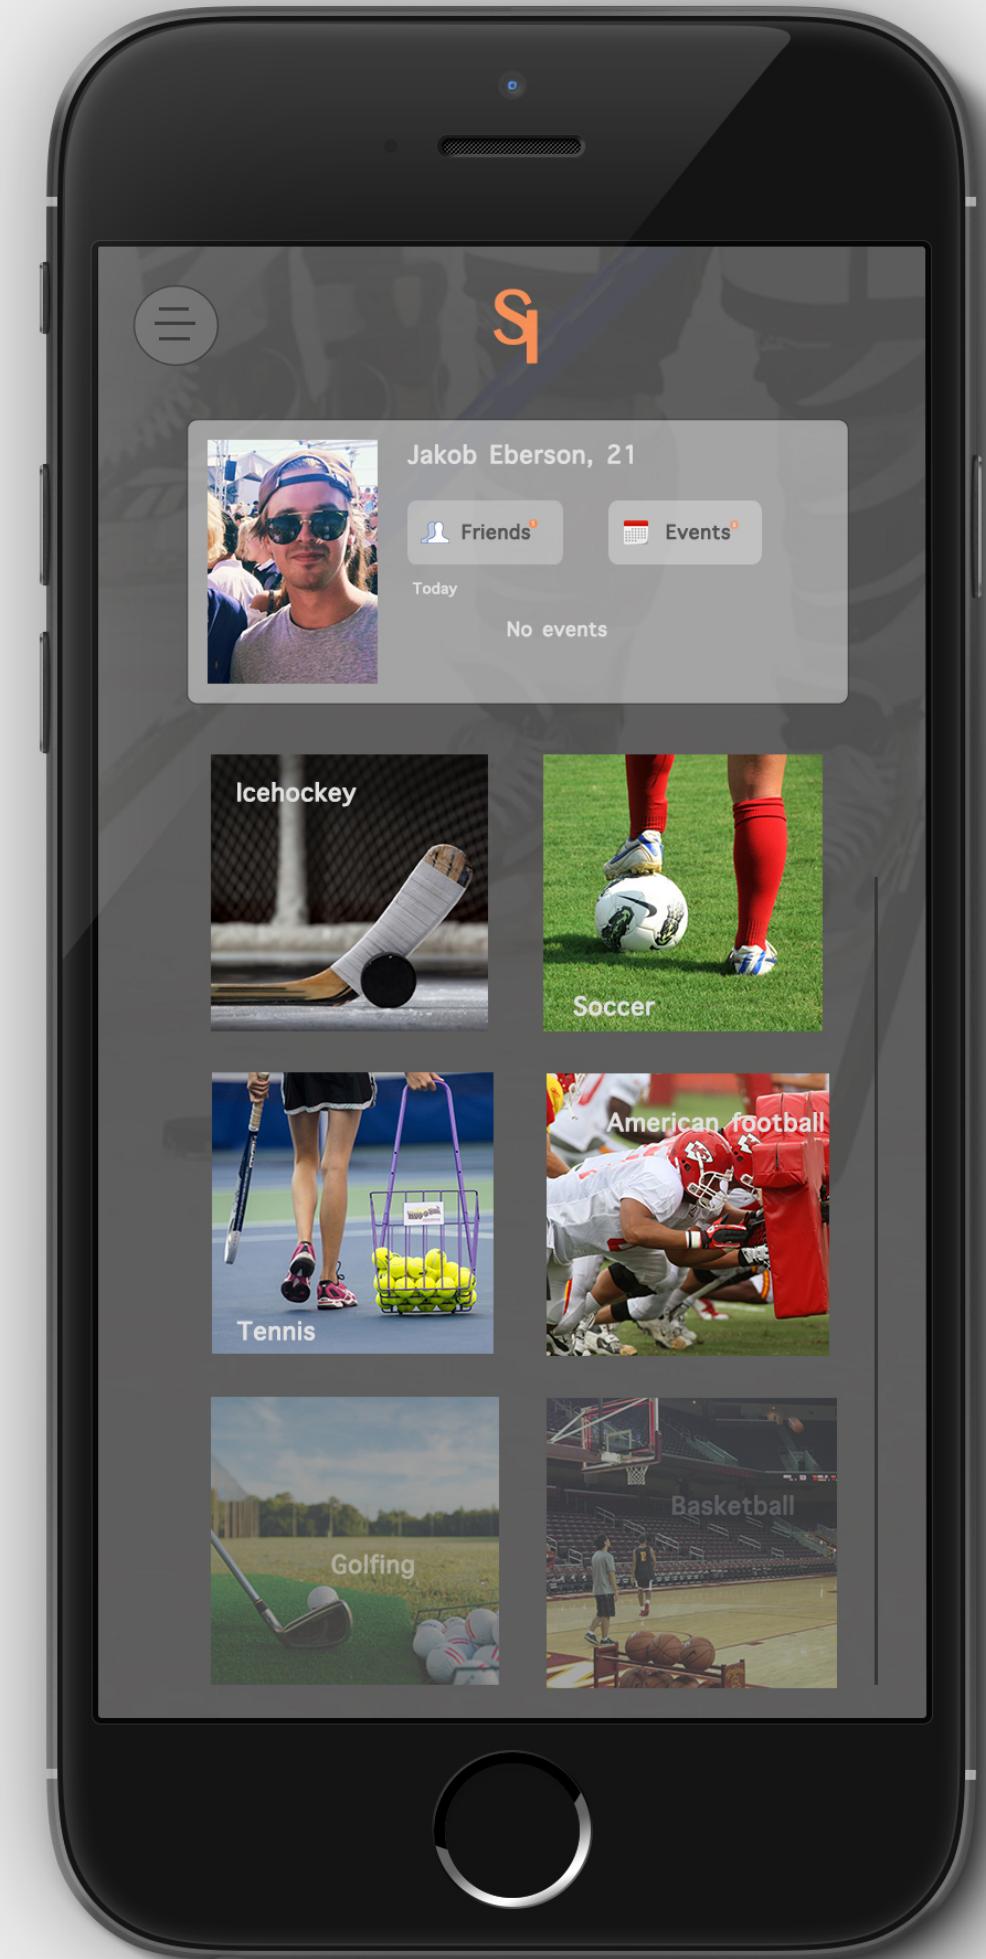

As the professional athletes always says: “There are no racism in sport”. I think that by getting involved in a sport, it will help a person get into society by meeting new friends and maybe find your inner professional athlete.

By starting the app, you'll get to the register/login screen where you first can choose your native language by pressing the flag. Afterwards you can register by username and password or via Facebook, Twitter and Google +.

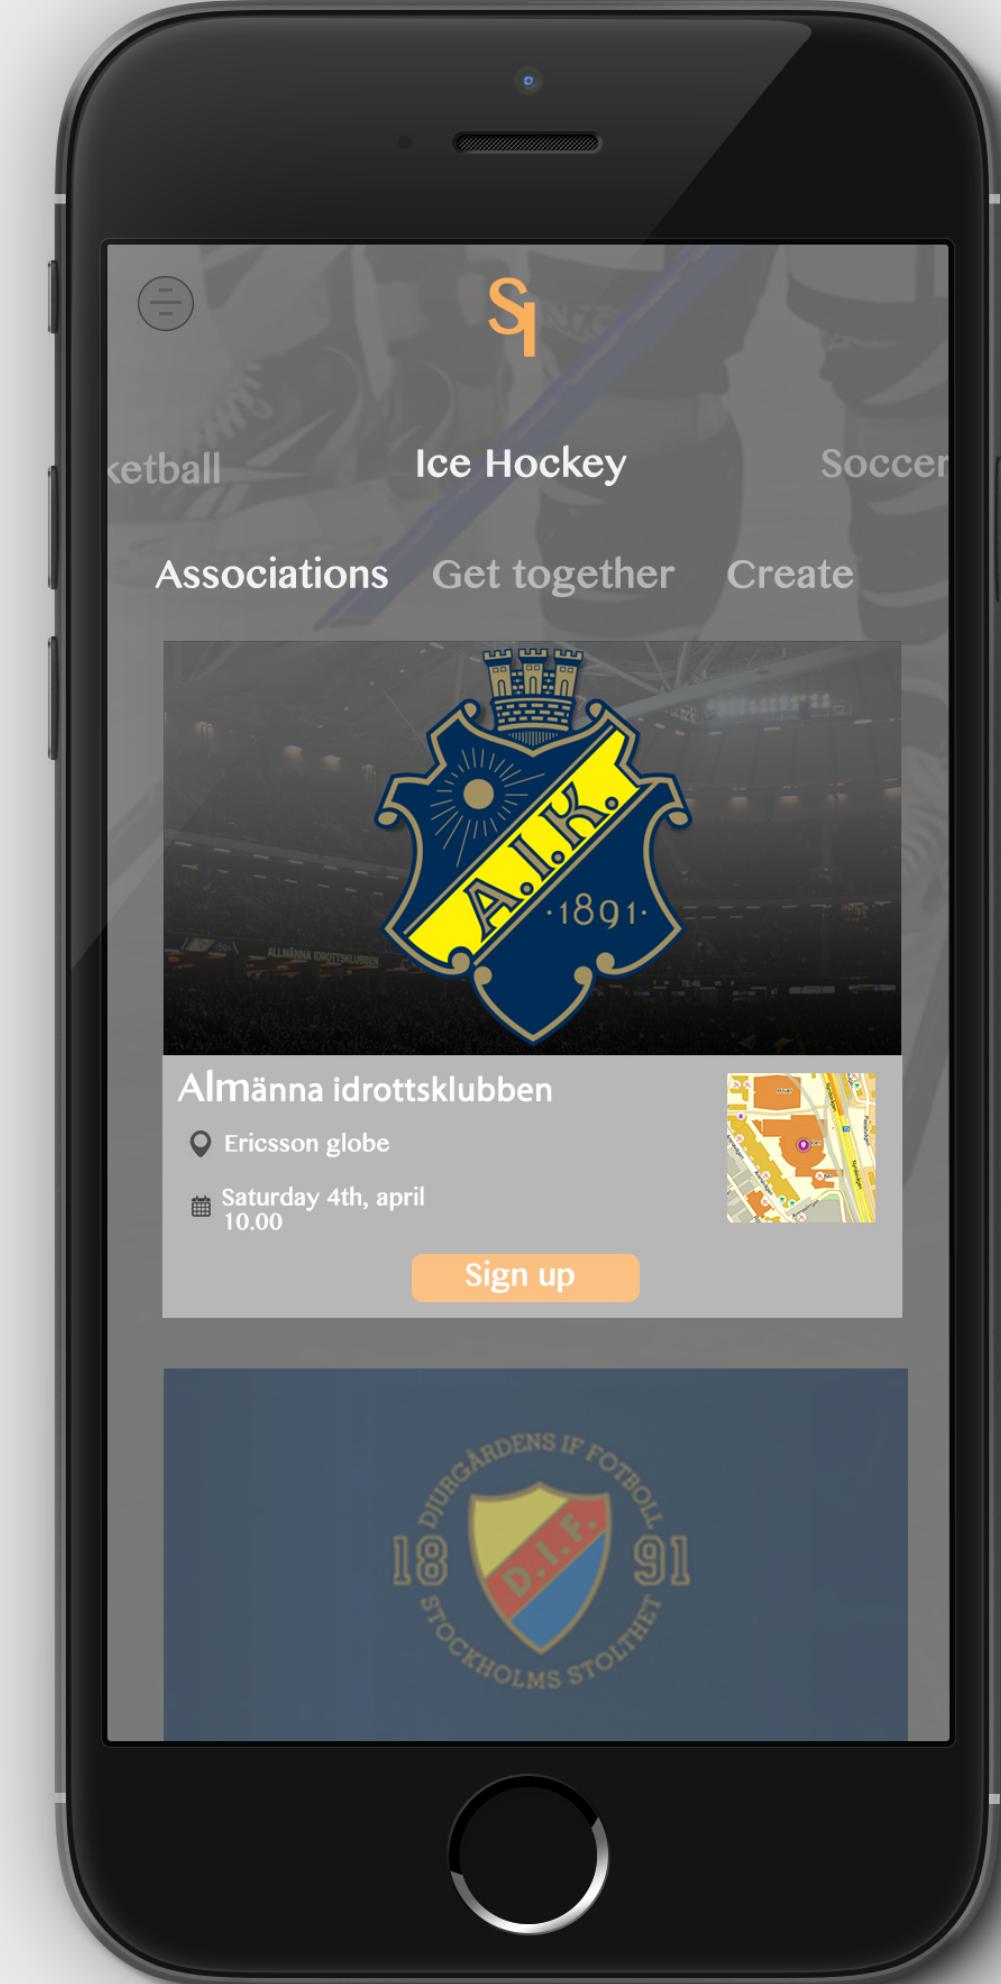

At the top of the Home screen you see your profile. From there you can watch your friend requests, future events and the schedule for the day (if you have any events that day). Below the profile you can choose what kind of sport you would like to practice. The amount of choices between different sports are up to people creating events for that particular sport.

The Home screen is designed as simple as possible to not create confusion among the users.

By pressing the Ice hockey picture, you'll get to this page. Here you can look for different associations that are arranging special events for refugees. As you can see, the information is very simple per association. Place, date and time is the only information given. This is to get the app simple and understandable. By pressing "Sign up" you are registered to that event. If an event is full, it will disappear from the "Associations" menu. By clicking the map, you'll get instructions of how to get there.

The Get togehter menu shows you persons that are hosting events at random public places. As you can see from the first one, Axel Wahlgren is hosting a ice hockey game at Östermalms IP at 7 o'clock pm.

The yellow text shows you how many spots that's left. Yellow means that it is almost full and green means that there's a lot of places left. Even here, you can press the map to get the instructions needed to get there, by car, by walk or by the bus. Like the Association menu, the events will disappear when full.

As you can see, we're still in the Ice Hockey menu so this is only the events for ice hockey.

The people who were at the event can afterwards give a rating to the user that arranged it. The higher rating, the higher place you'll get in "Get together" when starting a new event.

At the Create menu, you can create your own event by simply put in when and where your event is taking place. In the last column you're putting in the maximum amount of players that can sign up for it.

I think this application would help refugees to become active in sports and have a fair chance to create new friendships and to get integrated in the society
